

Privy Council (for Canada)

The Privy Council for Canada is a group of prominent individuals appointed, for life, by the Governor General. The appointments are made, as a matter of convention, on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Privy Council is tasked with aiding the reigning monarch (and thus the Governor General) by providing advice on significant issues.[\[1\]](#)

Privy Council - A Brief History

The origins of the English Privy Council date back to that country's earliest history,[\[2\]](#) but little is known of its structure or procedures before 1540.[\[3\]](#)

In addition to its advisory role to the British Monarch, from 1833 until 1949, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council served as the highest Court of Appeal for Canada: supreme even to our own Supreme Court.[\[4\]](#) During this period, Canadian constitutional law was largely shaped from London.[\[5\]](#)

The Canadian Privy Council was established by the British North America Act, 1867 (later renamed the Constitution Act, 1867).[\[6\]](#) Unlike its counterpart in the United Kingdom, it never functioned as a court. Instead, it was tasked with advising the Monarch, and with passing all orders-in-council / acts of executive power.[\[7\]](#)

Privy Council - The Job

Today, the Privy Council continues its historic role, advising the Governor General on various matters of state, including the use of royal prerogative (e.g. declaring war, assenting to legislation and calling an election).[\[8\]](#) However, advice given by the full council is not binding: the Governor General is, in practice, only obligated to follow the advice of Cabinet (the members of which form the operative branch of the Privy Council).[\[9\]](#)

Despite this obligation - in exceptional circumstances - the Governor General, as head of state, can act unilaterally to protect the Canadian people from "a Prime Minister and ministers who may forget that 'minister' means 'servant' and may try to make themselves masters."[\[10\]](#)

After being summoned to the Privy Council by the Governor General, members are required to swear a general oath of allegiance to the reigning Monarch, and an oath of office as a member of the Privy Council.[\[11\]](#) As for perks, they are allowed to affix the initials P.C. after their names and to carry the title "The Honourable."[\[12\]](#) Additionally, the flag on Parliament Hill is lowered to half-mast upon their death.[\[13\]](#)

Despite the honours granted, this is far from a full-time job. Most of the council's current members have never met together. The most recent gathering called for the entire Privy Council was in 1982 when they met for lunch to celebrate the Queen signing the proclamation of the Constitution Act, 1982.[\[14\]](#)

Privy Council - Who's on it?

The Queen's Privy Council for Canada consists of:

- Sitting cabinet ministers
- Former cabinet ministers
- The Chief Justice of Canada
- Former chief justices
- Former speakers of the House of Commons
- Former speakers of the Senate
- Former Governors General
- (Typically) Leaders of the Opposition, and
- Distinguished individuals (as a mark of honour)[\[15\]](#)
  - Maurice Richard
  - Conrad Black (since removed)[\[16\]](#)
  - Winston Churchill[\[17\]](#)

All federal cabinet ministers, once appointed, must become members of the Privy Council.[\[18\]](#) Although it is technically possible for the whole Council to meet and advise, this almost never happens. It is the current members of federal cabinet that form the Council's operative body (a.k.a. the "Committee of the Privy Council"),[\[19\]](#) performing the advisory duties of the Council on behalf of the other members.
