

Living Tree Doctrine

The “living tree” doctrine refers to a method of constitutional interpretation that allows for Canada’s Constitution to change and evolve over time while still acknowledging its original intentions. The doctrine achieves a balance between two seemingly contradictory goals: predictability and flexibility.